THE INDUSTRIAL PROBLEMS.

Trades Unions Are Working Toward a Definite Solution.

A. B. Grant of Cincinnati, president of the International Union of Metal Polishers, Buffers, Platers, Brass Molders, Coremakers, Brass and Silver Workers' union, recently addressed a meeting of members of those crafts at Boston.

The meeting was principally to discuss the out of work problem.

President Grant said in part:

"The out of work problem confronting the people of our country today is the result of our industrial system. The trades union movement, which stands for a shorter workday, higher wages and the giving to the wage earner the social value of his product, is following the lines of least resistance. This movement when it has attained the shorter workday, thereby giving employment to all men willing to labor for their daily bread and has secured for the toilers commensurate wages to their effort will have solved the industrial problem, and the serious question of today, how to care for the unemployed, will be comparatively unknown."

"The recent decisions of the supreme court affecting the rights of trades unionists have aroused a protest throughout the land."

"How soon public opinion will be so thoroughly aroused that it will compel the legislative and judicial powers to give fair play to the workers can but be conjectured. But it is certain that the workmen in all the industrial centers are determined to work as never before for their rights under the constitution."

Workers of New York.

In 53,502 factories in New York state there are 1,123,048 shop employees and 51,702 persons holding clerical positions. More than half (524,008) of the shop workers are engaged in 25,173 New York city concerns, which also employ 32,532 office helpers. The shop workers in 3,244 factories connected with the different branches of the printing and paper industry in the entire state aggregate 88,270, while the office employees number 10,800. The larger portion (2,177) of the plants of this industry are located in New York city, and they have in their service a shop force of 66,817 persons and 8,020 employed in office work. — Brooklyn Eagle.

The Angler.

The angler angles all day long. The fish bite mighty fast. He grimly baits his hook until He's up against the last. Then, cursing, he reels in his line And rises to his feet. For of all the bites he's had today There's not one bite to eat. —Lippincott's Magazine.

Don't Speaking.

"That girl doesn't speak to me if she can avoid it," said the man with a frown. "You should have more pride than to resent it."

"I can't help resenting it. She's the telephone operator." —Washington Star.

One Advantage.

"I'm glad I'm not like man," remarked the over, with a snicker. "I simply can't get in a broil as long as I'm in liquor."

Anything to Oblige.

Farmer—Have you seen my bull? Golfer—Gracious me! No! Where is he?

Farmer—That's just it; he's got loose, and we want to find him. So if you meet him you might just keep on that there red coat o' your'n and run this way! —London Opinion.
